Welcome to the second volume of the Vignette28 PhotoBook. Again I'm blown away by the creative output of all the participants. It's amazing to see all these Vignette28s in printed format. The impact - especially compared to what we look at on a small smart phone screen - is just overwhelming.

My Beloved Choose a Tiger for Me

n the Kingdom, a Gentleman loves the Princess, a serious crime. For the trial, he has to choose a door. If innocent, he'll choose the door that hides a beautiful Lady and be married to her. If guilty, he'll get a ferocious tiger and be devoured. The Princess finds out the secret and will hint about which door to choose. Will the Lady, a hated rival of the Princess, end up with the Gentleman? Or will the tiger?

The Princess says, "My dearest, the two of us are right for each other. Not one minute should we be apart!"

Since longer than any can remember, and further still if the writings of those ancient and addled academics are to be believed; the Hollar has nestled within it beings beyond our ken.

olk have many names for them, often personal, folkloric monikers given to those that preside over some particular patch of the deep wood or isolated hamlet. Strange names like 'Abbots Pintle' or 'The Raedwort', 'Eldrin give us your hand' or 'Old Saddybape'. Though little commonality can be drawn between reported encounters with these things of the deep wood, scholars have sought to codify and arrange the frantic tales of woodsmen and foragers into a single clade - 'Hollarfae' they call them.

uch thought has been given to their place and purpose within the ecology of the Weald, some believe they are byblows of the great forest's own ancient spirit, cast out to serve their own ends; others posit they are the tenders of nature itself, presiding over the wheel of life and death that rolls ever onward beneath these twisted boughs.

Cince the Rot has arisen, reported sightings of these Hollarfae grow In frequency, whether they exist in opposition to the corruption, or are its cause, none can say for certain.

This is a 1:12 scale recreation of a photo taken by an urbex photographer depicting an abandoned mansion. The decay on the walls and the items left behind by the original family stuck out to me as a great story to tell through miniature.

Saw Movie

Nic - Abandoned Miniatures

One of my favorite "horror" movies is the original Saw and I had to recreate the main set in miniature. This is 1:12 scale and built so the camera could take photos from either end of the room to get more perspectives. It was so much fun to add in all the rust, dirt, and grime!

Ergber's Good-Bad Day

Sean Slater @slaterminiatures

rbger was a regular customer to Lizzie's waiting for opening time. Hungry for a Roach Burger and eager to spend lacksquare his hard-earned cash from hiring out is over-achieving homicidal violence. Squinting over at the big bird who was currently tearing open a discarded crisp packet, slow thoughts trickled through Ergber's mind that perhaps there was something going on. The diner was invariably incredibly busy, it was probably to most popular diner in town. (Definitely the most hygienic not that it was a high bar if we are being honest). Shrugging he sat on a small plastic chair, which immediately collapsed.

ow quite confused and incredibly hungry Ergber began to wander, the normally very busy wastes-town was all quiet but the footsteps of the ogryn. Returning to the diner in a hope that Lizzie had returned, which she hadn't. Ergber noticed that the normally delicious smell that wafted from under the shutters of the diner had a foul, repugnant undertone. Concern twisted his brow as he thought of Lizzie, her pleasant attitude and (more importantly) incredibly tasty food.

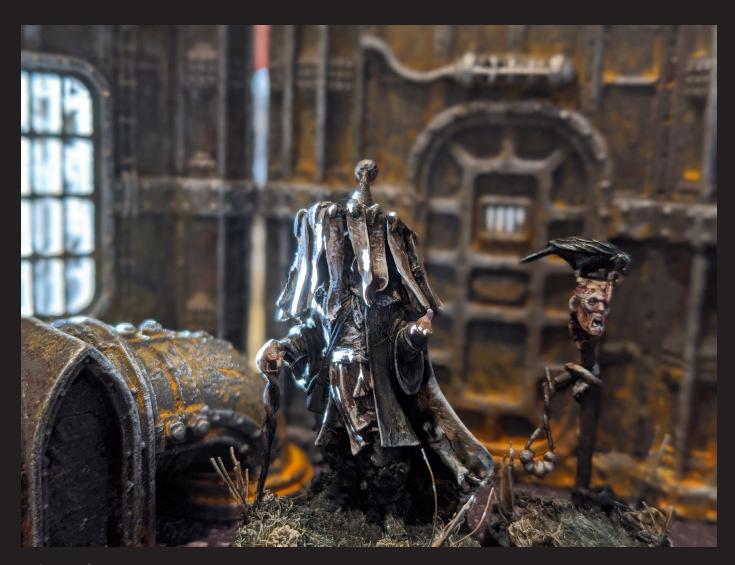

Ergber huffed, he was not having a good day.

good day for Ergber involved lots of fighting and lots of food, then maybe, just maybe, a little more fighting.

But today was not a good day, the best food place in town was shut. There wasn't even anyone around to batter which would have eased his complex array of emotions that always got triggered by lack of food.

ust as he was eyeing up a particularly confrontational looking wall there was a low whistle, then a repeated one from another direction. Ergber may be slow however he had been in enough fights to duck as a bolt of energy shot toward him. The bolt passed over his head blasting a hole in the offending wall.

He smiled, the day was looking up.

Blennorragius the Unwashed

Sam F. Derache @Sam F. Derache

It is a Daemon Prince of Nurgle, for the 40k universe.

A mix of kitbashing and sculpting, it is based on an old DooM 3: the Boardgame Cyberdemon that I cut into pieces, carved some parts and on which I sculpted the boils, buboes and pimples (yummy!), glued some chosen plastic bits and pieces of various kits from GW and Mantic. Most trained eyes will probably be able to see most of the original parts!

The base was made of sprues, baked polymer clay and bits from some gaming kits to give some height to this already tall monster and some industrial environment flair.

It was textured using plastic dust, some texture paste on a toothpick and small beads of unused putty to give it this crusty and dirty look I love before being painted using my blanchitsu inspired technique.

I made it as my entry in the famous Smashbash competition, but it did not make it, as I fumbled and sent it to a wrong address, haha!

"Archarion the Vile" is also a Nurgle themed model for 40k, an ascended wizard of sorts. As for Blennorragius, it is the result of mixed techniques, mostly kitbashing and sculpting. The base was a Lord of Contagion (a model I used for another kitbash) on which I used bits mostly from GW kits, especially a Chaos Rhino. The tail was first shaped in aluminium foil and then covered with a layer of putty that I sculpted to give it the texture of infected flesh with the usual distasteful gifts of Nurgle!

The base was made the same way as the one for Blennorragius, with a twist. I used a an empty roll of toilet paper to imitate a sewer pipe, and built a walkway structure around it to give the model some height. I then textured it all and poured some cheap gel glue mixed with sand and brown paint to create some muddy water around the said structure, giving it a swampy-sewery look.

That particular model was created for the Slug Wizard Spring event, which was great and fun!

AMBUSH

Rustbringers

Sam F. Derache @Sam_F._Derache

"Rustbringers" is the name of my home-brewed Deathquard army, and those models are the followers of Blennorragius and Archarion.

Most of the miniatures are kitbashed from kits from GW and Mantic (yes, again!), and not only Nurgle themed ones. You can see some Black Legion armour bits, some Khornate weapons and many others, all repurposed to serve the jolly God of Blights!

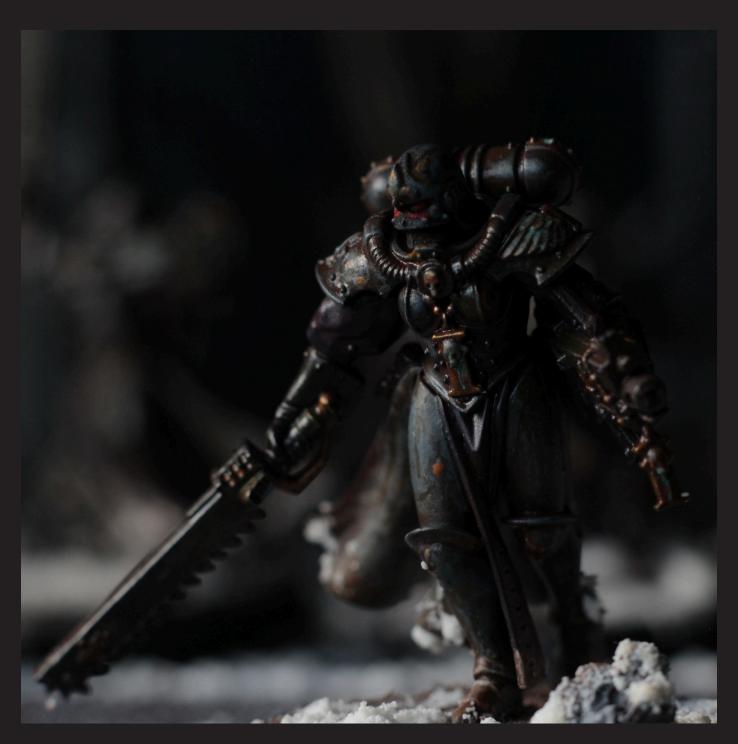

The bases were homemade with some pieces of cardboard and plastic to create some corroded metal plates and tubes, with some electronic devices wires, to give them a coherent industrial vibe, on pair with their leaders. It may not show, because those are Plague Marines, but most of this warband's fine warriors are in fact women, and were designed for the famous Female Space Marines challenge. I had a blast creating those, giving them names and writing their backstory. The leader of this squad is based, again, on a Lord of Contagion, to which I gave a Daemon Sword that I dubbed Gradh'uderch as a joke towards the people hating about this creative challenge. We may be nerds, but we can be funny sometimes!
